Meeting News January 2016

Kerry McNicol brought in an inflorescence from a Tillandsia somnians, over a metre and a half tall with five viviparous pups. The mother had all but rotted away and the pups were still growing healthily. Terry commented that, if she was to split the sheaths carefully back to the stem, the buds of, as yet, un-grown pups could be seen and perhaps prompted into growth.

Warril Evans showed us an Orthophytum vagans, which is grown in a mix heavy with perlite, which has been attacked by Dendrobium Beetle, so BEWARE.

Warril also showed us a way to line hanging baskets with left over shade cloth, NEATLY!

Neoregelia 'Bossa Nova' versus 'Sheba'

by Derek Butcher 2002 (see photos of Kerry McNicol's talk p.9)

This all started in November 2001 when I pointed out to Keith Golinski of Bromagic, Queensland, that I could not tell the difference between these two cultivars and Keith assured me he could. He even sent me photographs of plants he had received from Tropiflora in Florida and which had been growing under identical cultural conditions. He was quite clear in his own mind that the plant with a pale pink flush was 'Sheba' and the other, 'Bossa Nova'. Both, of course, are albo-marginate. This was despite the fact that the Bromeliad Cultivar Registry shows that 'Bossa Nova' has pink tinges too! The photograph in Baensch's 'Blooming Bromeliads (1994 p.128) shows no pink tinges either so I was keen to correct the information in the BCR!

I sent the photograph showing both 'Sheba' and 'Bossa Nova' to the Brazilians for their comments. Because 'Bossa Nova' came to America from Brazil in the first place in 1988, and, the Brazilians would not know much about 'Sheba' I would have expected a clear cut answer. Their verdict is that 'Bossa Nova' can have pink flushes too! So, the BCR is not wrong after all but it does show that these two cultivars are very similar indeed. We know that 'Sheba' is of hybrid origin, whereas 'Bossa Nova' is claimed to be a variegated form of N. compacta even though it is acknowledged to be different in shape to this species. No comparison has been done, as far as I have been aware, of the parts of the inflorescence.

So we have two very similar plants from different sources. What is all the more intriguing is that we understand a PBR or plant patent has been taken out on 'Ultima'. This is a medio-picta form in the same group so how it would be proved in court that this 'Ultima' is unique is a puzzle to me.

N. compacta cv. 'Bossa Nova', N. 'Sheeba', N. macwilliamsii, N. 'Martin'

Kerry McNicol's Talk

Clockwise Top Left:

1. N. 'Bossa Nova',
2. N. compacta,
3. N. 'Martin',
4. N. 'Bossa Nova' & N. 'Sheeba' look very similar unless grown in bright light,
5. N. macwilliamsii,
6. N. 'Martin'.

Meeting News January 2016 continued

Mark Belot had 3 unknown plants. #1 was a large Neoregelia which seemed to have cruenta in its mix. Green with red fingernails on the quite long (50cm) erect leaves, with many groups of leaves, more than a normal cruenta, grown in almost full sun. Consensus agreed that it may be a cruenta hybrid. #2 was another large Neoregelia, 40 -50 cm across with a flat rosette of green wide cuspidate (rounded) leaves, with a pinkish red 'fingernail', again grown in almost full sun. #3 A large Aechmea hybrid, grown in full sun with bronze tones to the leaves. Ian felt he has a similar plant at home, but the name escaped him. Ian will check and bring it along to the next meeting.

Mark Belot's 2 Neoregelias ? & Aechmea ?

Meeting News February 2016

Di Tulloch brought in a well grown, variegated Neoregelia for identification. She believed it was won in a raffle in the past, One suggestion was N. 'Shining Light' , however Dave recognised it as one of his plants N. 'Shining Example'. Ian suggested now it has been 'identified', Di should continue her research looking up the various databases, BCR, BSA and FCBS photo galleries, to see a good variety of photos in different growing conditions to verify identification.
